

It's time to improve jobs and the quality of supports for people with disabilities

It's been more than four years since direct support workers and disability rights advocates helped pass the Stevie Sellow Act. This law created a fund to improve jobs and the quality of supports for people with disabilities living in Intermediate Care Facilities (ICFs/MR).

But we've been waiting and waiting for the law to actually go into effect. Finally, this year Washington, D.C., will fund the Stevie Sellow Act.

It's up to us to make sure the funding actually goes toward the right priorities: to improve the quality of support services and to increase wages, benefits and training for workers in our facilities.

Now is the time to act. Join us.

Direct support workers and advocates are coming together to tell the Washington, D.C., City Council and the mayor.

It's time to fund good jobs and high-quality supports for people with disabilities living in Washington, D.C.'s ICFs/MR.

YES! I will make my voice heard.

- ☐ I will talk with my co-workers about how we can work together to improve our jobs and the services we provide.
- ☐ I will contact the mayor and City Council and tell them to fund good jobs and quality services.
- ☐ I will attend meetings with other direct support workers and advocates.

Please fill out the following contact information so we can stay in touch about how we can improve quality and win better jobs at ICFs/MR across D.C.
